Going round a sharp curve at break neck speed, we felt inclined to sug-gest to the conductor that it would make no especial difference if we did not get to Day ton till 9 45. The night was cold, and the hard ground thundered and cracked. The bridges, instead of roaring, as is their wont, had no time to give any more than a grunt as we struck them and passed on. At times it was so rough we were in doubt as to whether we were on the track or taking a short cut across the fields to get to our de tination a little sooner. The flagmen would hastily open their windows and look at the screeching train. The whistle blew wildly, of so much to give the villages warning as to let them know that something terrible had gone through. Stopped to take in wood and water. A crusty old man crawled out of a depot, and said to the engineer, "Jim, what on earth is the matter

"Don't know," said Jim; "that fellow in the car youler is bound to get to Dayton, Brakes lifted, bell rung, and off again. Amid the rush and pitch of the train there was no chance to prepare our toilet, and no looking glass, and it was quite certain that w would have to step from the train im me liately into the lecturing hall. We were unfit to be seen. We were sure our hair was parted in five or six different places, and that the cinders had put our faces in deep mourning, and that something must be done. What time we could spare from holdin ; on to the bouncing seat we gave to our toilet, and the arrangements we made, though far from satisfactory, satisfied our conscience that we had done what we could A button broke as we were fastening our collar-indeed, a button always does break

A MISCALCULATION. "How long before we get there?" we antiously asked.
"I have miscalculated," said the conduc rams did not sail, and the friendship by-tween England and America was strength- "My dear man," we cried, "you might as well turn round and go back; the audience will be gone long before 10 o'clock."

"No!" said the conductor; "at the last "What is a good test of a diamond?" asks depot I got a telegram saying they were waiting patiently, and telling us to hurry

The locomotive seemed to feel it was on the home stretch. At times, what with the whirling smoke, and the showering sparks, Many Of the good things of this as if we were on our last ride, and that the brakes would not fail till we stopped for and the din, and rush, and bang, it seemed

Several of the justices talked about their experiences with eviction cases. They are toward the opera house. Without an in-stant in which to slacken our pulses, the chairman rushed in upon the stage, and introduced the lecturer of the evening. After in the quickest way shedding overcoat and shawl, we confronted the immense audience and with our head yet swimming from the motion of the rail train, we accosted the people-many of whom had been waiting since 7 o'clock-with the words:

"Long suffering but patient ladies and gentlemen, you are the best natured andi-ence I ever saw." When we concluded what we had to say it was about midnight, and hence the title of this little sketch.-T. De Witt Talmage in Brooklyn Magazine.

Gen. Logan's Washington House. The general found his Stone house in a frightful state of decay. There was scarcely a whole window pane in it. Doors were broken into slivers and half the locks were gone. A few thousand dollars would have made it over into a palace; a few hundred have made a pretty good bouse of it. There are no glass partitions by Tiffany; no carved mahogany stair rails; nor are the ceilines and walls linerusta-waltonized Mrs. Logan took charge of beautifying the house. For weeks she frequented the sec ond hand stores, and even within the last few weeks these places have heard her careful, (1 criminating inquiries. The house abounds in old fashioned Virginia and Maryland furniture. A $3 sofa is the best in his house. New Mexico, where Mrs. Maj. Tueker, the only daughter of the general and Mrs. Logan, has lived for several years, has given a good deal of the furnishings of Calumet place. In the hall hangs a big cowboy's bat, which is worth $2 an ounce and weighs three-fourths of a pound. Around it hang in festoons bead embroillered medicine bands, and crossed under it are two fine painted Indian bows Navajo blankets of most gorgeous colors are used as portieres. War relies are strewed around in all sorts of places. Swords and bayonets, cartridge boxes and knapsacks haversacks and blankets hang in well de signed groups in nearly every room. are interesting and decorative, and it does not take a national bank to pay for them advice to Newspaper Contributors. Write only when you have something to ay and then charge a price for your work Not the price that you wish to get but that which the overstocked market is likely to pay. And, though Maurice Thompson did say: "The waste basket is the true cradle of literary art," do not cradle your own work in your own basket unless you are quite sure that its ill success is due to lack of worth rather than to the fact that you sent it to the wrong stall. Vegetables won't do for will satisfy the pangs of hunger. So send your farm products to the green grocer's; your crisp facts to the daily press, not to the magazines. It is so true that ignorance of he section where readers wait to absorb just what you are waiting to print consigns a forceful message from your brain to their o an untimely grave in the waste basket. Last, if a manuscript is not satisfactory then completed do not send it out, but lay sside until one day you pull it out of its ageon hole for reperusal. vill prove either a pretty good thing, or when you come to your well cooled ideas as to a stranger's the one thing lacking will be at once apprehended and supplied. Make it money's worth and claim your wages-or leave the field for those who are living to work and working to live.—Trebor Ohl in The Journalist.
